Will Spain get a clean grid by 2030?

The need will increase in Spain as the country boosts its solar capacity another 70% over the next five years, en route to an 81% clean grid by 2030. "The stronger grids you have, the better possibilities you have to route power in different ways," explained BloombergNEF networks analyst Felicia Aminoff.

Does Spain have a good grid?

"If you have strong grids and a bit of spare capacity in power lines and substations, it becomes easier to deal with issues that come from generation." But Spain has the lowest ratio of grid to clean power investment in Europe, the news story stated, at just 30¢ per dollar, compared to an average of 70¢ across most of the continent.

Is Spain's grid inflexibility causing Australia's 'system black' crisis?

In Australia, RenewEconomy quoted Alex Schoch, head of demand flexibility at the UK's biggest energy retailer, Octopus Energy, who compared the inflexibility in Spain's grid with conditions that triggered South Australia's "system black" crisis in 2016.
